The Insular Latin Grammarians

Vivien Law 1982 The adaptation of Late Latin grammars from the schools of the Roman Empire for use in a foreign Christian society culminated in the British island in the 7th and 9th centuries in the development of two distinct types of grammar designed respectively for elementary and for more advanced students. These works, whether they take the form of elaborate commentaries on the classical grammars, or of simple collections of paradigm, reflect the reading and intellectual preoccupations of their authors, the first teachers in the West to face the problem of large-scale formal foreign-language teaching. The influence of the Insular grammarians extended far beyond their own time; their works, translated into both the Continental and Anglo-Saxon missionaries, shaped both the literacy and the pedagogical technique of their pupils the Carolingians, and their influence foreign-language teaching has persisted until our own time.
The Carolingians and the Written Word

Ronald McKitterick 1989-90-20 Functional analysis of the written word in ninth and eighth century Carolingian European society demonstrates that literacy was not confined to a clerical elite, but dispersed in lay society and used administratively as well.

Grammar and Grammarians in the Early Middle Ages

Vivien Law 1977 Grammar and Grammarians in the Early Middle Ages is the only book in this field which examines linguistics in the Middle Ages from the standpoint of both the medievalist and the historian of linguistics. Its sources material along with previously unpublished texts are used extensively with all foreign texts translated into English, and are listed in a useful bibliography to aid further study. Historical surveys, author studies and introductions to medieval grammatical terminology are also included to help clarify the historical context of the study. The volume will prove invaluable reading and an important reference work for those studying historical linguistics, for medieval and cultural historians, and to all who are interested in the intellectual life and literatures of medieval Europe.

Foundations of Learning

Rolf Hendl and Bremer 2007 No period in the intellectual history of North-Western Europe has been as formative as the early Middle Ages, when Latin texts were transferred to the learning accumulated over centuries in the Mediterranean basin to recently founded centres of religious scholarship in the ever expanding Christian world. The aim of this scholarship focused, first and foremost, on a proper understanding of the Bible as God’s Word and God’s Creation. During this period the foundations of medieval learning were laid in the monasteries and by men from distant shores who considered it their vocation to extract this precious knowledge to future generations of indigenous scholars. In this process, Stymian ended up in England, (Richardson in Italy, and Anglo-Saxons in Frisia and Bavaria and thus helped build a common intellectual culture in Europe. The arts and sciences of the monastic cells and monastic schools fed with vast amounts of accumulated knowledge far beyond the capacity of modern man, the most important means of conveying knowledge was the European. The Proceedings of the British Academy annually gathers together some of the finest lectures delivered in the previous year, sponsored by the Academy. Volume LXXI features such eminent public lectures as the Chatterton Lecture on Poetry, the Raleigh Lecture on History, the Shakespeare Lecture, and the Keynes Lecture in Economics, as well as equally prestigious papers in art, archaeology, and social anthropology. As always, the volume concludes with obituaries of renowned members of the Academy, written by fellow members; this year's obituaries include Christopher Ricks writing on William Empson, Douglas Gray on fellow medievalist Eric John Dolson, and Nicholas Kaldor on his Cambridge colleague, economist Piero Sraffa.
