In Baghdad, the Abbasid caliph created a center of learning which was known as the House of Wisdom, or the Grand Library of Baghdad. The Islamic Empire was a time of great innovation, especially in the field of astronomy and mathematics.

The scientific study of astronomy in the Golden Age of Islam began when the House of Wisdom, or the Grand Library, was founded in Baghdad between 754–775 AD under the rule of Abbasid Caliph Abd al-Malik. This new center attracted scholars from across the Islamic world, and the library became a hub of intellectual activity.

During the Abbasid period, Baghdad was known for its advanced scientific and medical institutions. The House of Wisdom played a crucial role in preserving and advancing the knowledge of earlier civilizations, particularly the Greeks and the Persians.

During the Abbasid period four centers of learning were established: Bayt al Hikma (House of Wisdom) and the Nizamiyah (theological institute) in Baghdad, Dar al Kutub (house of Books) in Basra and the House of Wisdom in Samarra.

Wisdom teeth are the final set of teeth to grow into your mouth, although some grow without any issues, others have issues when they grow in sideways or because they are impacted.
